Dear Erv;

How do ewe feel about it? To ewes or not to ewes? I am not in favor of replacing the original Goat which we have been ewesing all these years. Its torn ear and mangy fur are honorable scars of battle and old age, and only increase the nostalgia and sentiment ewe feel for it. It is a family jewel to pass on to the eweth of today.

But perhaps we could find another ewes for the newe one. It would be good if ewed take a survey among the women to get their views. Perhaps someone in the family could give us a fewew clues like the sex, species, age, etc of the newe head (or the body it grewe on). If we could trevethfully call it "The Gnu Ewe," for example, the women might viewe it more favorably than if it were "The Old Ewe" or "The New Goat."

There are one or tewew other points to mewes on. Do ewe think the men would be jealous or resentful if the women had a newew and more bewetiful head than they have? Would we need a jewel that both heads could not be in one household at the same time? That might fewew a family fewew.

Ewers trevvely,

B.K.A.
